SYP dimension was pretty much the only item with any shine this week as the rest of the lumber and stud market saw softness creeping back in. Even with the recent SPF curtailments announced and now in play, buyer confidence waned. Green and dry DF also softened after looking like it may firm up in the two weeks prior. Panels are still flaming out to the tune of triple digits, seeking a trading level that is likely still a ways away based on historical averages. There were some reports that box store takeaway has improved slightly, but likely not enough to hang your hardhat on. Concerns over supply constraints downstream from framing lumber slowing housing progress remain valid.
