The upward market trend in lumber and structural panels continues entering October. While far from a runaway, this run has shown legs over the last five weeks and looks to continue into November. It's not uncommon to see a fall run strengthen and push into winter. While the holidays are viewed as a time when takeaway can slow, it's also a time when mills take downtime and reduce production. Tack on the potential for weather related transportation delays, and you can see where the markets can tighten up at year end. If you need it, don't bet that waiting will pay off.
