The commodity markets continue to limp along, with little incentive for buyers to cover anything beyond very short term needs. We are in the polar opposite of where we were in 2020-2021. Mill curtailments must surely be on the horizon as we roll deeper into fall toward the holidays, with shorter days and shorter work weeks. Keep an eye out for production gyrations, and longer rail transit times. But in the short term, not a lot of energy to this market.
