The pace of the market slowed just a touch this week on dimension lumber, and sellers began showing a few more loads available on the open market. OSB remains high and tight as mill order files stretch through August. Plywood is a more affordable option as it has not heated up to the extent of OSB. New home construction continues to fill the real estate void where a dearth of existing homes for sale has created this market swing. Additionally, existing homeowners appear to be spending more on R&R in lieu of selling their low mortgage rate homes and moving up. The heat is really kicking in across much of the country. Damn global warming... some of you need to trade your gas guzzlers in for electric cars or maybe a Prius, because I'm sure not gonna! Keep cool this weekend.
