Lumber markets continued to see weak demand as the grind of October continued. Perhaps pumpkin spice lumber would help? Interest rates rose again on the 30-year mortgage, adding to the muted market mood and making cautious buyers that much more so. It's obvious that mills will need to address the lower demand via production curtailments, so be on the lookout. OSB may be getting close to a bottom - as several mills moved some production at discounted levels and immediately tried firming up. It's cued up for a classic 'dead cat bounce' (please no letters from PETA) as the same demand muting lumber is going to impact the panel market, too. The mornings are darker longer and definitely cooler. Enjoy the weekend as our temps are getting ready to plummet, too.
