The downward drift of the lumber markets continued across all species. This market just can't find it's mojo as we roll toward cooler, wetter weather in the northern states. We are not far from talking about "the frozen tundra of Lambeau Field". There will be supply adjustments coming soon if demand does not change, and it sure doesn't look like it's going to in the near term. Plywood remains flat depending on how you stack it. =) Prices are largely unchanged in both western and southern plywood. Apparently David Blaine is dictating OSB markets as it is climbing again in a market that as noted is struggling on the demand side. We will see if the magic show continues to amaze in the coming weeks. Enjoy the ALCS and NLCS this weekend - best baseball coverage of the year.
