Lumber markets continue to be somewhat lackluster this week in general. Panels, on the other hand, remain on the upswing in a market that is being driven more by a lack of supply than demand. Buyers are approaching the panel market with caution at these levels, and sellers with contracts are the only ones showing much of anything in OSB. Reports of a steady increase in the amount of imported OSB slated to hit U.S. ports in the coming spring months have caused some buyers to pause. As recent history has shown, OSB mills will be able to control pricing in the near term, but a correction will come - just not very soon. Enjoy your Easter weekend - we are getting oh so close to better weather and even longer days.
