Markets saw less activity this week as the July 4th holiday loomed just ahead, with much of the industry taking Friday off. Regardless, there was enough going on to see the mills raising prices on most lumber species. Field inventories remain lean, and secondaries were able to capture higher prices on quick shipping wood. In the South, there is still no such a thing as quick shipping wood. Transportation woes continue to drive both buyers and sellers crazy. We have had a fundamental shift in trucking dynamics that will not be changing in the near term. We've made it to the midpoint of a very trying year. Enjoy your celebration of America's 250th birthday - and be safe wherever you are. Happy Independence Day!
