Activity picked up in MF this week as buyers stepped in at more comfortable levels to cover their needs. Some of this was done below last week's levels, but mills got less user-friendly as their order files stretched. As the summer heat begins to lessen, jobsite takeaway has begun to pick up in many markets. It's not unusual to see markets begin to firm for a late summer/early fall bump near the time when the pigskin flies. Lumber has dipped but is now at a much better value, and the OSB manufacturers are very lean on open market wood, selling contract loads almost exclusively. Don't be surprised to see OSB pop in the coming weeks. Plywood remains on the upswing, especially in the west. As we near the Labor Day break, be sure to plan ahead for your jobsite needs as trucking will certainly tighten. Have a great weekend!
